"A beautiful short story."

—Priyanka Seth, Editor, Star Scribes

"This story really reminded me of 'The Gift of the Magi' by O. Henry, but where his tale is about a newly married couple [Gifts] is about what seems to be a first date gone awry -- as they often seem to do . . . It's just occurred to me that the two characters aren't named in the story, which I didn't really mind, in fact it kind of added to the universal nature of the story."

—Hope Hammond, Freelance Editor

"I have just read your story, and found it... how to put this... having been in a serious relationship for some time, I can see exactly how the characters are fighting over a trivial matter that is in the end just that: trivial and unimportant in the larger scheme of things. For that reason, I found it not only touching but also real, and amusing in that way that makes you smile for the irony of life."

—Carrie White, Managing Editor, Glass House Press

“WOW, what a storyteller you are, Valerie Michele! This could be a mini-movie! It reminded me that to allow words to "hurt me" by taking something personally erodes my happiness . . . Spirit does have a sense of timing and humor?”

—Lore Raymond, Entrepreneur/Writer, Women As Visionaries

“It gave me chills. I appreciate all the details you included. I did feel the love as they both did what they could to honor the other. Beautiful!”
